

AKI UMBRELLA STAND

Design by Rodolfo Bonetto

In Japanese, Aki means “Autumn”, and it is specially in this season that its usefulness as an umbrella stand becomes apparent. Rodolfo Bonetto, who designed it in 1975, looked to essentials when creating this minimalist and amusing, but absolutely efficient and complete object.

Made in rotomoulded polyethylene, Aki is designed with four holes to accommodate that same number of umbrellas, whatever the shape and size. It can be used indoors or outdoors since, by its very calling, it has no problem with water and even on the rainiest days, introduces a dash of good spirits thanks to the range of colours in which it is available.

BRAND

B-Line

Giorgio Bordin, who wanted to revive historical Italian design icons and offer furnishings for the residential and contract sectors, founded B-Line in 1999. Since the beginning, the brand has combined re-editions with contemporary furnishing accessories designed by international creatives. B-Line products are transversal, ideal for indoor and outdoor residential contexts and workspaces. They are also suitable for furnishing those increasingly hybrid and flexible places that must satisfy the needs of everchanging contemporary lifestyles. The company pays particular attention to sustainability and the durability of its products, whose materials are entirely Made-in-Italy. B-Line's commitment to the environment involves the entire production process with its finished and semi-finished products regularly subjected to careful quality control procedures.
